Declaration of Consent

1. Introduction

The consent of the registrant constitutes a legal basis for processing personal data under the Data Protection Regulation. A consent is contained in Article 4 (1) of the Regulation. 1, No. 11, defined as being the following:

"Any voluntary, specific, informed and unambiguous testimony of the registrant whereby the registrant agrees upon the declaration or clear confirmation that personal data relating to the person concerned is subject to treatment."

In addition, Article 7 of the Regulation sets out a number of conditions which must be met before a consent is valid.

2. The data controller's obtaining consent

The data controller must, when initiating a processing of personal data, assess whether the processing of the information should be based on the consent of the data subject or on the basis of another legal basis in Articles 6 and 9 of the Data Protection Regulation. This is particularly true in the case of new tasks to be carried out by the data controller or in the case of a processing of personal data that the data controller normally does not perform.

Consent must be obtained prior to commencement of treatment.

3. Validity Conditions

1. A voluntary consent

A consent is valid only if it is voluntary. This means that the registrant has had a truly free choice.

2. Specific consent

A consent must be specific and contain a precise indication of the purpose of the treatment. The objectives must be concrete to such an extent that it is clearly stated what consent is given. This must be seen in conjunction with the principle of limitation of the Regulation, which follows that personal data must be collected for explicitly stated and legitimate purposes and may not be further processed in such a way as to be incompatible with these purposes.

If collecting information serves multiple purposes, separate consent must be obtained for each purpose. It must be possible for the registrant to consent to a purpose, but not to grant consent for another or other purpose. This can be ensured by the compilation of a joint statement in which the registrant can indicate for which purpose he / she gives consent.

The request for consent must be clearly distinguished from other circumstances, such as trading terms and conditions.

3. Informed consent

A consent must be informed. This stipulates that the data subject must be aware of what is given consent and that the consent is communicated on an informed basis. The data controller must adapt the information in a statement of consent to the specific situation and consent shall at least contain information about the data controller's identity, the purpose of the proposed processing, what information is being processed and what treatment is taking place.

Often consent is obtained at the time of collection of the information. In such cases, the consent will coincide with the data controller's general and wider disclosure obligation pursuant to Articles 13 and 14 of the Regulation. The notification requirements may be incorporated into the consent statement.

A request for consent must be in an easily accessible form as well as in a clear and simple language that is adapted to each target audience. Typically, it will be sufficient to make one request, even though the target audience is both children and adults as long as the request is readily understandable for children.

4. Form requirements and documentation

Consent must be obtained prior to commencement of treatment, and must be given in the form of an unambiguous statement of expression which must not give rise to any doubt. Consent should thus be given by a declaration or active act clearly indicating the registrant's acceptance of the processing of personal data about him / her. This can happen, for example, by signing or ticking fields. Passivity in the form of silence, already ticked fields or inactivity, on the other hand, will not constitute an unambiguous statement of will.

For the treatment of sensitive personal data (such as health or the like), the consent must also be explicit, which emphasizes that there is no doubt in particular that consent has been given.

There are no formal requirements for a declaration of consent. A consent can thus be obtained orally, in writing and digitally. However, the data controller must be able to demonstrate that the data subject has consented to the processing of the personal data and therefore it would typically be necessary to obtain the consent by a written declaration, including, for example, digitally.

4. Withdrawal of consent

The registered person has the right to withdraw his consent at any time, and the registrant must therefore be informed of this right before consent is given. It must be as easy for the registrant to withdraw his consent as it is to grant consent. The Data Inspectorate recommends that the data controller offers the registered more options to withdraw their consent. The registered person shall not be entitled to withdraw his consent. Consent must thus be withdrawn without, for example, payment of fees, etc.

Withdrawal of a consent has only forward effect and does not affect the legality of treatment based on consent prior to retirement. The data controller must discontinue processing of the information as soon as possible and to the extent that the retention of information constitutes a form of treatment, the information shall as a general rule be deleted unless the data controller is required to keep the information on another basis as a result of, inter alia, accounting rules. In that case, the data subject must be informed of the new home base and purpose.
